The root nodules isolated from smaller plants were clearly visible (as shown in previous post). But some plants that were having thick and robust roots showed prolific growth. Are these galls or root knots? I am unable to describe. On gentle teasing, followed by staining with methylene blue, I was able to diagnose certain nodule-like individual structures. I will try out a smear of the bacteria isolated from these and go for gram's staining.