

Trichomes of a wild leaf with purple margins

KANWAR SINGH

READ REVIEWS

WRITE A REVIEW

CORRESPONDENCE:

palkanwar1995@gmail.com

DATE RECEIVED:

October 13, 2018

© Singh This article is distributed under the terms of the Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International License, which permits unrestricted use, distribution, and redistribution in any medium, provided that the original author and source are credited.

A wild member of Malvaceae family growing along roadside in Chandigarh was plucked for Foldscope explorations. It is a wild woody shrub with leaves having serrated, purple margins and veins.

Foldscopy of the epidermal peel of the leaf revealed presence of stellate trichomes and glandular hairs.

