

Unidentified microbes on surface of Chrysanthemum leaves

KANWAR SINGH

READ REVIEWS

WRITE A REVIEW

CORRESPONDENCE:

palkanwar1995@gmail.com

DATE RECEIVED:

October 26, 2018

While looking at the cocoon-like thing on Chrysanthemum leaves, I also noticed dust. With the curiosity how dust would look under a foldscope, I took the sample on a slide using the cellotape. I saw some unidentified spindle shaped microscopic organisms along with the dust particles on the leaf surface. What are these? I am unable to identify.

[gallery type="slideshow"

ids="74867,74868,74869,74870,74871,74872,74873,74874,74875,74876,74877,74878,74879,74880,74881"]

© Singh This article is distributed under the terms of the Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 International License, which permits unrestricted use, distribution, and redistribution in any medium, provided that the original author and source are credited.

